NET NEUTRALITY

BUSINESS LEADERS STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF A BIPARTISAN SOLUTION

➤ BUSINESS FORWARD

BUSINESS LEADERS TO CONGRESS:

PASS BIPARTISAN LEGISLATION FOR NET NEUTRALITY AND CONSUMER DATA PRIVACY

Democrats and Republicans are offering competing proposals for net neutrality and consumer privacy, and neither side has the votes to win on its own. Business leaders across the country are calling on Congress to pass bipartisan solutions to these pressing issues.

ECONOMIC GROWTH

Nearly one-third of economic growth in 2016 was generated by the digital economy.

ECONOMIC EQUALITY

Broadband also levels the playing field between fast-growing coastal innovation hubs and struggling smaller cities and rural areas in between.

WHAT NET NEUTRALITY MEANS

Net neutrality ensures an open and vital internet by preventing network operators from favoring internet traffic from some sites over others, censoring viewpoints, or unfairly prioritizing their own offerings. Rules should be clear, enforceable, and permanent.

WHY DOES IT MATTER?

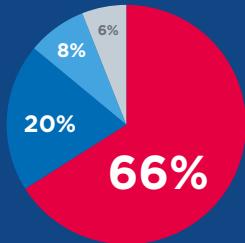

Without net neutrality, companies may invest less in new, data-intensive applications. We'll see less innovation in distance learning, telemedicine, and media streaming.

WHY SMALL BUSINESS OWNERS CARE

Our network is more concerned about net neutrality than cyber security, data privacy, and broadband access, because they believe a neutral internet is critical to their ability to reach customers, open new markets, and compete with larger companies.

By more than a 3 to 1 margin, our leaders support a bipartisan approach over utility-style regulation.

- Congress should pass bipartisan legislation that prevents broadband providers from blocking, throttling, or unfairly prioritizing internet traffic.
- Congress should pass laws that ensure broadband providers are heavily regulated like public utilities.
- I don't think we need regulation or laws protecting net neutrality.
- Congress should leave the net neutrality issue to the FCC.

TODAY'S GRIDLOCK

Four successive FCC chairs, serving two Presidents, issued net neutrality principles, policies or rules. But federal courts or subsequent FCC orders struck down each of them, largely because the FCC cannot act without clear authority from Congress. Only Congress can create net neutrality rights.

NET NEUTRALITY SUPPORTERS TEND TO CALL FOR "GOING BACK TO OBAMA'S RULES" - BUT WHICH RULES?

A

SUPPORT

OBAMA'S 2010 "PLAN A"

Julius Genachowski, President Obama's first FCC Chair, issued formal regulations against blocking, throttling, and other discrimination, but they were overturned because he lacked authority from Congress.

OBAMA'S 2015 "PLAN B"

Tom Wheeler, Obama's second FCC chair, proposed a workaround that reclassified broadband as a Title II "telecommunications service" - a distinction that gave the FCC greater authority to regulate. But reclassifying broadband opens the door for the FCC to set broadband prices or demand broadband companies share their transmission lines with competitors, which undermines their incentives to invest more to expand their networks.

NO NET NEUTRALITY RULES

Many Republicans have come around to the basic framework of Obama's "Plan A", but they strongly oppose the utility rule approach. Unless Congress reaches a bipartisan agreement that can get 60 votes, consumers and small businesses will be left with no net neutrality rules.

TO U.S. CONGRESS:

We write to encourage you to adopt a bipartisan approach to protecting net neutrality and data privacy. We understand these reforms are contentious in Congress, but they enjoy broad public support across the country.

Net neutrality is critical to keeping the internet open, free, and competitive, and it is particularly important to small businesses and start-ups. Business leaders in our network are more concerned about net neutrality than cyber security, data privacy, or broadband access – and two thirds of them support a bipartisan solution.

The FCC cannot effectively enforce net neutrality without statutory authority from Congress, but Congress has debated for 15 years without passing a bill. Today, a majority favors net neutrality, but they are split over which of two Obama-era proposals to support. His administration's first proposal ("Plan A" in 2010) treated broadband as "information service." His second proposal ("Plan B," in 2015) was a workaround. It treated broadband as a utility, which Republicans oppose. If net neutrality supporters in Congress cannot get behind Obama's "Plan A," we face at least two more years without net neutrality protections in place.

Meaningful privacy reforms face similar gridlock, but progress is being made. The middle ground in Congress now favors consumer rights like access, correction, and deletion, which were deal breakers a few years ago. It's about time. Nine in 10 business leaders in our network support a comprehensive, national privacy standard.

A patchwork of 50 state laws won't work for the Internet. We support a national approach, provided the protections are strong and enforceable.

Businesses rely on the internet every day. We can't afford to leave these issues unaddressed. We ask you to work across party lines to adopt these much-needed protections for net neutrality and consumer privacy.

“

Our business relies on a free and open internet for our online business to survive. Much of our business communication is done that way. It's essential that we maintain net neutrality.

WHY BROADBAND MATTERS

1. Economic growth.

The digital economy accounted for nearly a third of all U.S. economic growth in 2016; over the past decade, the digital sector has grown at almost four times the pace of the economy as a whole.

2. Economic equity.

Broadband access is also critical to broadening economic opportunity and equity within the U.S. A 2013 report by Ericsson found that gaining access to broadband correlates with a $2,100 per year boost to household income, while an earlier Brookings study concluded that each 1 percent increase in a state's broadband penetration increases employment by up to 0.3 percent per year.

3. Technology of the future.

Sound policy also lays the foundation for deploying the next generation of technologies in time to meet the exponential growth in bandwidth that tomorrow's applications (such as connected homes and autonomous vehicles) may demand.

Congress should compromise on a deal to continue to focus on building effective innovation. Investment in innovation is the key to our future. We need to work on a win-win solution philosophy.

SCALE OF INVESTMENT

Since 1996, broadband providers have invested $1.6 trillion to create our current network infrastructure. That averages to about $73 billion per year.

By comparison, the U.S. government invests $64 billion per year in America's highways, mass transit, and rail infrastructure, combined.

“

A net neutral and cyber secure broadband infrastructure is required for the U.S. to compete and succeed economically, politically and militarily. Innovation in those areas is not just desirable, it is necessary to protect our national interests.

BALANCING POWER BETWEEN NETWORK AND EDGE

In order to encourage innovation across the internet, we must encourage investment by both the companies that build the network and the companies that use it.

If we regulate broadband providers too much (or unwisely), we discourage them from making the massive infrastructure investments those edge companies' products and services will require.

If we allow broadband providers to block or throttle access, we discourage edge companies from developing new applications and services.

“ Leaders of both parties need to compromise around middle-ground solutions to strike a balance between effective rules and encouraging innovation and investment. ”

Providers should not be allowed to block or throttle consumers' access to lawful sites or services, nor discriminate against anyone on the edge of the network by prioritizing or discriminating against their traffic.

COST OF DELAY FOR SMALL BUSINESS

The digital revolution has changed the American small business landscape over the past generation. These gains and opportunities could be endangered if broadband providers began charging extra tolls for businesses to reach their customers online or discriminating against some online services in favor of others willing to pay for the privilege.

“
As a small business owner, I depend on ready and fast access to the internet for everything. Slow speed slows my ability to maximize my time and efforts to reach sustainable success.
